Editorial

I am pleased to announce some important changes for AI Magazine. First, I would like to welcome B. Chandrasekaran, of The Ohio State University, as the new book review editor, and Robert Morris, of NASA Ames Research Center, as the new reports editor. I know that they will do an outstanding job, and I urge the AI community to actively support their work through submissions and suggestions. Chandrasekaran has prepared an editorial, appearing in this issue, presenting his vision for the book review section. I thank the previous book review editor, Adele Howe, and previous reports editor, Peter Patel-Schneider, for their excellent service to the magazine.

Second, this issue marks the inauguration of an editorial board for AI Magazine (their names appear on page two). The editorial board members will play an active role in guiding the magazine, monitoring progress across the field and assuring that the magazine has timely, high-quality articles on significant new developments. I expect the editorial board to have a considerable impact on the magazine, and I am very grateful to the board members for accepting this responsibility.

Finally, to expedite the processing of submissions, AI Magazine will now accept submissions in electronic form. Full submission guidelines are available on the AI Magazine home page, www.aaai.org/Magazine. I look forward to your submissions!
